PLEASE feel free to provide us some smile...Faster PC faster computers. Memory is a familiar subject. You've probably heard of RAM (Random Access Memory), but are you familiar with the term "Hard Drive"? Obviously, you want the latter to exist in your computer to store all of the files, photos, and videos you save. But what does RAM have to do with Hard Drive? Well, we'll have to start with basic computer terms first. RAM is an acronym, which stands for random access memory. It is a memory that is connected to your CPU. Your computer needs this memory to work, and for the files you save to be stored on your hard drive. How do you make sure that the information you save is stored on your hard drive? You need an extra storage device called your Hard Drive. You have one hard drive, so this one is by far the most important, so naturally it's the one that people tend to call "the hard drive". But what exactly is a hard drive, and why do you need one? A hard drive is a device that allows you to save information. When you plug your hard drive into your computer, it will appear as an icon. Hard drives contain many folders, and these are what all of your files will be saved to. If you've been using a computer for a while, you'll probably know that it can get very confusing when it comes to folders. Let's have a look at how folders are made and how they work. How Do I Make a Folder? If you want to create a folder, you'll need to right click the mouse on the desktop. You'll notice that you have a small triangle with an arrow on it next to the name of your computer. Double click on this icon and you'll be able to make a new folder. Give it a name of your choice and the folder will be created. Now that you know how to make a folder, let's have a look at how it works. How Do I Use a Folder? There are two ways in which you can access your files stored in folders. You can either open the folder to find the files, or you can open the folder to find all of the files and sub-
